

ATA Skills Assessment Service for Individual Candidates

The Automotive industry has a large range of qualifications providing industry recognition for the skills of an individual. These skills (competencies) are required to perform specific roles in manufacturing, sales, service and repair of motorcars, bikes, trucks, buses, etc.

Qualifications range from Certificate I to Advanced Diploma covering the roles of managers, mechanics, body repairers, painters, specialist technicians, sales, parts interpreters, warehouse staff, assemblers, painters, trainers and many more.

Automotive Training Australia (ATA), the industry's national training advisory body, offers individuals who have developed relevant skills through experience, the opportunity to gain qualifications whether currently working in the automotive industry or seeking employment in it.

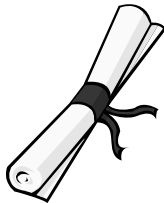

Services

ATA offers to assist individuals, to identify an appropriate qualification, gather evidence to demonstrate their skills and submit a portfolio of evidence for assessment.

The service provides candidates with information (by post or email) and gives personal assistance through an initial interview with an assessor.

The portfolio of evidence can include examples of work; reports from employers, customers and colleagues; copies of training courses completed; results of completed tests, etc.

The Outcome for the candidate:

A Qualification Certificate – where all required skill competencies have been proven.

A Statement of Attainment – where some but not all competencies have been proven.

Where candidates do not have evidence available to prove their competence, alternative assessment approaches can be arranged such as organising an assessor to observe them in the workplace, undertaking a test or project, etc.
